Seacomm Federal Credit Union is widely regarded as a purveyor of exceptional quality financial service with hometown convenience. A welcoming staff of 140 employees work at branches in Massena, Potsdam, Malone, Canton, Ogdensburg, and Plattsburgh NY, and South Burlington, Vermont. Membership is open to persons who live, work, (or regularly conduct business in), worship, or attend school in and businesses and other legal entities located in St. Lawrence, Franklin, Clinton, Essex Counties, New York and Grand Isle, Chittenden, and Franklin Counties, Vermont.

The Seacomm story began in 1963, when 10 visionary employees of the Chevrolet Aluminum Foundry of the GM Corporation in Massena invested $5 each to obtain a share in a newly formed organization. Scott Wilson, Seacomm President & CEO, recounts, “We were formed in 1963 at the then Central Foundry plant here in Massena, which became General Motors. The 10 individuals who signed the original charter got together with the rest of the men at the plant to start up a cooperative credit union. Some had in their check book and are overdrawn, the credit union’s employees are empowered to reverse those fees. Last year, the firm refunded over $150,000 in fees to ensure members know just how important they are.

Wilson acknowledges, “My job as the CEO is to focus on staff engagement. That’s a priority here because my belief is if you take care of your employees, they’ll take care of your members. Every new staff member comes to a CEO breakfast with me and we talk about the strategy of the organization, and, ultimately, how they fit into the overall success. We want them to focus on member satisfaction. The bottom line for us is that we really have to step up to the plate and ensure that we’re doing everything possible when it comes to service.” For ten consecutive years, SeaComm has made the list of the Best Companies to Work for in New York in the medium-size category. This last year, 96 percent of the credit union’s employees surveyed said they were satisfied with their employer.
With lobbies restricted during COVID-19, drive-thru transactional teller lines became the new norm. But SeaComm members could still make an appointment to come in for loans, or mortgages, or if there was an issue they had to deal with. The SeaComm team felt it was critical to remain open for people at a time of such uncertainty. As for meeting the demand for technology from its members, in addition to ATMs and online banking, SeaComm has its own pay app that integrates with Google Pay and Apple Pay, and Smart Line where people can call in and get their balances and do transactions by phone.

Wilson reports, “At the height of COVID-19, folks really navigated to online services – mobile deposit capture, transferring money, checking balances – and we have all that available to them. So, when we go into a new market, we ensure we’re going to be competitive against other financial institutions. We do a strategic review of all our technology and products and services to make sure we’ll meet the needs of current members and those who want to do business with us in the future.”

Expansion is a key component for the credit union’s success that goes back a decade. In 2008, the original SEG (Select Employee Group), General Motors, went bankrupt and closed the plant in Massena, impacting payroll in the region to the tune of $60 million. So, SeaComm started making strategic plans early on to diversify its markets - first opening in Clinton County on the border of Vermont, and in the last two years, taking on three additional counties there. That expansion will happen through 2024. One new branch opened this year, another one will open next year, and then one the following year.

Looking ahead, Wilson says, “The future really... depends on what the members demand of us. They own us, we're a cooperative, and their needs are changing constantly. So, we still offer traditional delivery channels, where you can come into a branch or phone our call center. We offer new technologies, but I don't think the branch structure will go away, although, our footprint is much smaller than before. We used to build 5,000-sq.-ft branches, now they're 3,500 and they may become even smaller.

Most credit unions have an in-depth relationship with their vendors. In that regard, Wilson shares, "Diebold that handles all our banking and ATM equipment has been a great partner for us. PW Campbell out of Pittsburgh, PA has been with us since 2010. They planned for our branch expansions and helped us build a new headquarters. There's also, Jack Henry, our core operating system. Contactless debit cards - that's important for us through our partner, Fidelity FIS. The bottom line is we look for valuable vendors who will be with us long term. There are so many – the reality is we depend on all of them and we take care of our members through their services."

At SeaComm, loans are still made based on a person's character. Even if there are credit challenges, if a member has a compelling story, they will probably be successful at obtaining funds. Everything comes down to improving the member experience and doing the right thing.

A few years ago, the credit union opened a personal, financial advisor service for members who may be retiring or planning for retirement. "We're always open to any changes necessary for the members," says Wilson, "that's who we're here for. We're also blessed to serve the communities we do business in. Last year we gave almost $234,000 in community support. They're our family, our friends, the people we do business with, and we need to take care of them, as well. We're proud to have won the Dora Maxwell Award for Social Responsibility in 2018 and 2020 for our Pay It Forward program."
"At SeaComm, we're committed to the credit union philosophy, 'People Helping People.' We're focused on making our communities a better place to live, and we believe there's no better way to do that than by giving back. That's why we proudly support local organizations to help strengthen the neighborhoods we serve and improve the quality of life for residents within our membership area."
